

Keats House and Burgh House, Hampstead on Thursday 21 February 2013

This visit has been organised by Kate and Mike Quinton

John Keats lived at what is now called Keats House from 1818 to 1820. The setting of the house and Hampstead Heath inspired some of his most memorable poetry. There are pictures of his family and friends and many other artefacts. We shall probably split into two groups to have a guided tour led by their Clive Jones of the ground floor and either afterwards or beforehand the opportunity to visit the whole house.

After lunch we plan to walk uphill to Burgh House to be introduced by Ashley Hannebrink to the exhibition of seven John Constable sketches, on loan from the V&A, just steps from the views that inspired them. REMS has met there before. It is a good place for tea and a cake in the buttery.

Meeting

We meet either for coffee at the Hampstead Tea Rooms in South End Road, nearly opposite Hampstead Heath Station or, if time is pressing, at Keats House.

One can get there by Overground to Hampstead Heath Station. By Underground on the Northern Line there is a choice. From Belsize Park Station either walk 10 minutes uphill or catch the 168 bus to its terminus at South End Green. Alternatively, walk 10 minutes downhill from Hampstead Station or catch the 46 bus to South End Green. If you have an hour or so, another possibility is that the 24 bus will take you all the way on its scenic route.

Lunch will be at the Freemasons Arms at the bottom of Willow Road, a few minutes walk from Keats House.
