MANSION HOUSE and GUILDHALL THURSDAY 4 SEPTEMBER 2008

This visit has been organised by George Freeman

Mansion House is one of the grandest surviving Georgian town palaces in London, with magnificent interiors. It is the purpose-built home of the Lord Mayor of the City of London, providing not only living and working space for the Lord Mayor and his household but also room for large ceremonial entertainments and banquets.

Building began in 1739 and the architect was the City's Clerk of Works, George Dance the Elder. Sir Crispin Gascoigne was the first Lord Mayor to take up residence, in 1752. Built around a central courtyard it contained a cellar, a ground floor for the servants and the kitchen, a grand first floor of offices, dining and reception rooms, including the Egyptian Hall where banquets were held, a second floor with a gallery for dancing and chambers for the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, and a third floor of bedchambers.

The Egyptian Hall is so named because its form was thought to replicate the dining halls used in Egypt in Roman times, with giant columns supporting a narrower attic area. Reconstructions of such halls were studied in Roman times and became very fashionable in the 18th century. However the decoration is classical. Although Mansion House retains much of its original character, there have been changes - one of the most important of which was the covering of the internal courtyard to form what is now known as the Saloon to provide a large reception area.

Structural repairs, careful conservation and complete redecoration were carried out in 1991-3. Mansion House was originally intended to enable the Lord Mayor to represent the City in appropriate style, and it continues to fulfil this function more than two centuries later.

The current Lord Mayor is David Lewis and he is a member of the Solicitors' Company, Fletchers' Company and the Welsh Livery Guild.
